When the odds are against you and everything's awful,
And nothing is going your way.
And everyone's saying, "It's out of the question,"
For clearly it isn't your day;

Just remember what happened at Buffalo
When the Oilers came into town.
They were making a rout of it, the Bills were just out of it.
By 32 points they were down.

When a lot of your friends have just written you off,
Abandoning you to your fate,
When they say, "There's no point" even trying to win,
That for you it is "simply too late."

Just remember how Buffalo pulled it together,
When their team was so far behind.
It took such heart to climb out of that hole,
It took all their talents combined.

How both offense and defense
Refused to accept that the game and the season were over.
Though everyone said they were buried and dead,
The Bills simply wouldn't roll over.

When everyone tells you, "You might as well quit,"
That you simply don't have what you need,

Think of somebody like backup quarterback Reich
And a pass catcher like Andre Reed.

Lesson one in that wildcard playoff they played
Is it's always important to try!
No matter how hopeless your own situation,
You never, no, never say die!

Lesson two is the lesson the Oilers learned
On a day they were doing so well.
People said, "You just know it: there's no way to blow it."
The truth is there's no way to tell!

When the breaks are all yours
And you're riding so high that victory's coming real soon,
Remember what happened to Houston,
To the Oilers and a quarterback named Warren
Moon.

Whether they're booing or cheering you now
And whether you're cold or you're hot,
You've got to keep trying and doing your best,
And giving it all that you've got.

For the contest's not over until it's all over,
And in life it is also the same.
Until it's all over, in mud or in clover,
You've got to keep playing your game.
